Sheerline Passes With Flying Colours

The new residential aluminium window system from Garnalex – Sheerline Classic – has passed the PAS24:2016 security test with flying colours.

A maximum sized double side hung Sheerline window successfully passed both mechanical and manipulation tests with no issues at all.

Garnalex asked BSI's technicians to carry out destructive testing to see just how strong the window system was. The lock side of the window achieved extraordinary results, withstanding 5kN of force before the lock failed. This was all the more impressive as the window had already been subjected to full mechanical and manipulation tests.

Phil Parry (pictured), Sheerline Testing and Standards Director, adds: "Sheerline exceeded the required loads for PAS24:2016 by more than three times, to the amazement of the technical staff carrying out the testing.

"We've designed Sheerline from the ground up to make it easy to fabricate, install and sell. It will also perform at a much higher level than fabricators and installers are used to. So, we're pleased but not surprised by these security test results."

Greenaway Gets Going At Garnalex

Paul Greenaway has joined as Sheerline Area Sales and Technical Manager – South East. He will introduce Sheerline systems to aluminium and PVC-U fabricators to build sales in the region.

Greenaway has worked in the industry for nearly 34 years, bringing with him a wealth of experience. Having started his career at his family's fabrication company, he moved to fabricator GJB Developments. Following 21 years in a variety of roles, including seven years looking after technical support and product testing, Production Manager, and Factory Manager, Greenaway was recruited to be ALUK's Area Sales Manager for London and the South East.

He says: "There's a huge appetite in the market for aluminium. The market is growing, and a lot of PVC-U fabricators are seeing the potential.

"I accepted the job without seeing the window system, because I knew with Roger Hartshorne behind it, it would be truly ground-breaking. And I wasn't disappointed, Sheerline is going to change the market."

Hartshorn adds: "Paul's background puts him in a great position. He has a natural understanding of fabricators' needs, especially in setting up aluminium production. Paul is a great addition to the team." I
